LITERATURE

RESPONSIBILITIES OF A TEEN-AGE DRIVER

A teen-age driver has many responsibilities. It is sometimes very hard for him to remember and to live up to them. He has to bear in mind that the people with him are his responsibility and it is his job to keep them safe.

Any driver, especially a teen-age driver, has to have excellent self-control. Boys have a tendency to taunt the driver into doing something rash, such as exceeding the speed limit or some other "little" thing that can cause a great deal of harm.

A young driver may want to prove himself to the boys with him and will allow these boys to affect his good driving habits.

A young driver must realize that the safety of those with him rests in his hands. No matter what happens, he should be able to keep his wits about him in case of an emergency. People qualified to talk on this subject have said that teen-agers have better reflexes than almost any other age group. In order for a young driver to act quickly in a crisis, his reflexes have to be in good working order.

Everybody seems to expect more from a teen-age driver than from any other age group behind the wheel. A teen-age driver must remember this, even though it may seem unfair. It may appear to a young driver that people are ready to blame him for any accident he may have and not compliment him on any good job he has done in driving. Because of this attitude, young drivers may not try to live up to what people expect of them, and may forget the responsibilities that they have.

A teen-age driver's responsibilities are numerous and difficult to fulfill. Ignoring taunts from friends, keeping reflexes in good condition, and trying to live up to what people expect are some of his many responsibilities. If a teen-age driver does remember all of his responsibilities and works to build a reputation as an excellent driver, then the thinking people in his community will respect him. When he has gained respect, he should always work hard to keep it and to maintain his reputation as a good driver.

THE PRETTIEST PLACE IN HARTLAND

Hartland, as you probably know, is a small, rather industrial town, with comparatively few landmarks to remember. There is, however, one very pretty scene to which I would like to call your attention.

Rowell Hill, in North Hartland, holds a lovely scene in the summer months. When you are driving through North Hartland, stop on Rowell Hill and look around.

Close, on either side, you will probably see bright green trees swaying with the breeze. Straight ahead you will get a view of the distant scenery. Pines stand erect and the shadows of the other, larger trees reflect on the smaller ones.

At mid-afternoon, also, look at the surrounding countryside. Toward the east you may gaze at Hartland, or at least a part of it. On the outskirts of the town and also up toward Hartland Academy you will be able to distinguish smooth, green fields and restful, grazing cattle. Closer, you may glimpse Moose Pond. It is very pretty at a distance.

Sponsored by STEVENS STUDIOS

Usually, sundown presents the loveliest of all scenes here. The bright, red sun lights the countryside and seems to protect that particular section. The shadows grow darker as the sun sinks even lower behind the horizon. Finally there is no sun to be seen, only a pink reflection of it, which seems to cover the land like a blanket, thickening as the sun sinks lower.

I think that this is truly the prettiest place in Hartland.

CONVENIENT DEAFNESS

Who says old dogs can't learn new tricks. We have a dog who was fourteen last month and she still outsmarts us at times.

From the way she hobbles around, one wouldn't think she could even get her feet off the ground, but if the family is away and comes back during the day, she has somehow sprung up onto the divan!

One of her most amazing tricks, though, is her convenient deafness. If, for some reason, we want to put her outdoors, we could holler all week and she wouldn't even look up. If I want to pat her or something I have to go where she lies or forget the idea. But, when we want to feed the cat, what happens? If we just say the cat's name softly or open the refrigerator door, we have to be on guard, because the old dog always comes barreling around the corner as if she were going to a fire!

So, by now, as this case shows, we have discovered that old dogs do learn new tricks. They are just too smart to let us know it!

MY FORGETTING SYSTEM

As I remember, (please correct me if I have forgotten all the details) we entered this freshman class last September with our byword, "strive" but so help me, I can't remember what we were striving for.

Nevertheless, here I am trying to pick up the pieces as I remember them. In the first place I forgot the course I intended to take and found myself deeply involved in the wrong subjects. Suddenly I remembered my mistake long enough to get to the principal's office. Thank heaven he doesn't have a memory like mine. He very kindly put me on the right track. I am now taking French, Algebra, and Home Economics. There is another subject but I can't remember what it is.

I seem to be getting along very nicely keeping my assignments. All I have to do is call my friends when I start to study and they graciously give me all the details.

It isn't at all funny, this memory of mine. I went all the way to school one very stormy morning awhile ago. Suddenly, I remembered that there had been a no school announcement on television. At least I think that is the way it was . . .

HOW TO LOSE FRIENDS

Everyone is always talking about ways of acquiring friends. What about the poor, defenseless people who have too many friends? They have friends who come calling when the children are pulling taffy all over the furniture. They have friends in need when there is no need. I want to point out some ways to save these unfortunate people from the very unhappy fate of friends, friends, and more friends.

The first thing to remember is never accept and like yourself for what you are. Know that you are the only important person in the world. Think only of yourself, and say "I" with at least every third word. Work to better yourself, and let everyone know how hard you work while everybody else is lazy.

Another rule to learn is never accept and enjoy others as they are. Find something wrong with every person you meet, and let him hear about all his own faults and everyone else's faults too. Do not look for or try to find good things in others. Talk only of bad characteristics in persons. Remember, when you are away from these people they talk about you as you talk about them.

One of the main items to remember is never to be loyal to friends, and do not be truly worthy of their confidence in you. Remember, honesty is not the best policy. Cheat or be cheated is the motto of the "Non-friend Club." If someone trusts you, show him what a sucker he is, and let him down.

Some other things to remember are these: dress sloppily, do not participate in school and community affairs with your own age groups; do not let anyone do you favors; do not enjoy doing anyone a favor; and do not relax and enjoy your life for what it offers.

Practice hard and constantly and some day you will be truly a friendless person.

ROWENA WHITTEN '60

HOW TO BECOME A GENIUS

Would you like to be a genius? There are several easy ways of becoming one. The most common are: 1. copying a fellow student's paper, 2. bribing the teacher (not always so easy), 3. sneaking a look at the test the night before, 4. being sick the day of the test and getting a preview of it the next day from someone who took it, 5. buying an electronic brain, 6. or just plain studying.

Before I start explaining these methods, I would like to rule that last one out. Studying is too much work and takes too much time. This method should be employed only if nothing else works.

The first method is probably the best known of all. I don't believe there are many students who haven't used this system. It is very good, and I recommend it to lazy people. But, if and when you use it, please be sure that the other fellow's answers are right. Also cast a leery eye around to make sure there are no teachers watching. Though I could never figure out why, teachers are very strict about this sort of thing. It must be that they don't like to see us get good rank.

The second method, that of bribing the teacher, is not, as I noted, so easy. Money just doesn't seem to appeal to some teachers—funny considering the size of their salaries. I have known only a very few teachers for whom this method has worked.

The third method is about the hardest. I don't mean it is hard to get a look at the test but it seems that many teachers do not get around to making out the test until the period before.

The fourth method is perhaps the best way. One can usually find a fellow student who is willing to tell all about the test. This doesn't work, though, when the teacher makes out a completely different test.

The fifth method is excellent but expensive. There aren't many people who can afford an electronic brain, This method is also a bit inconvenient. Who would want to carry an electronic brain around with him?

Sponsored by STEVENS STUDIOS

All of the first five methods are very good and I highly recommend them. And remember, if you are serious about this, never use that number 6 unless absolutely necessary. With the studying method, you may gain something you apparently don't want: Knowledge.

THE STORY OF OUR CHIEF INDUSTRY

The Hartland Tanning Company was formed in 1937 by Max Kirstein, in buildings bought by citizens of Hartland from the American Woolen Company. They hoped that an industry could be induced to move here to aid in the economy of Hartland.

With a personnel of approximately one hundred workers, the Tannery sent out its first shipment in 1937. By the end of the year, about 1,500,000 square feet of leather was delivered to various customers.

The production increased every year until about nine million feet was shipped out in 1950.

In 1953 and 1954, additions were made to the already existing buildings to increase production.

In January of 1955, a one-story construction of steel and concrete blocks was planned to increase further production. In that year twenty-one million feet of leather was produced. Production increased to twenty-four million in 1956, thirty-one million in 1957, and thirty-six million square feet in 1958. The number of employees increased from one hundred in 1937 to around four hundred and twenty at the present time.

As a reward for their labor, all employees who had worked through the year 1953 received $50 savings bonds in March of 1954. A profit-sharing plan was started, and fifty per cent of the gross profits before taxes was returned to the employees.

The tannery starts production from hides bought mostly in our western states. In only three weeks of production, the hides are changed from raw stock into finished products ready to be cut into shoes by shoe manufacturers all over the world.

In the first two months of 1960, slightly more than six million square feet of leather has been shipped out, bettering any previous first two months in the history of the tannery.

The future of the tannery appears to get brighter as time progresses. The tannery is truly a mainstay of Hartland's economy.

STORIES A SCHOOLBOOK COULD TELL

A year ago when I left the printing office, I was as proud as could be because of my red leather jacket with large gold letters, DICTIONARY, engraved on me.

I was very pleased and proud when people came to me for information. But now I am no longer attractive, for my corners are bent; my pages are torn and marked upon.

It would be a pleasure to punish that terrible boy who has used me so often for a post office and wastebasket. Often he stuck notes in my ribs, underlined certain words upon my pages, then passed me to that bashful girl across the aisle. She, in turn, scribbled sweet nothings along my margin, and thrust me back into his dirty hands.

I can't understand why people always pick on me. A great, tall "Webster's Dictionary" stands on my left and pushes until he nearly crowds me off the shelf. A big, fat, green encyclopedia towers above me at my right, but when those beady-eyed students spy me, out I come, upside-down and otherwise.

The other day two snub-nosed boys with bushy hair stopped to talk beside me. Suddenly one began to swear. The other answered him with, "That ain't right neither." Never have I been possessed with such longing to be able to speak aloud! After a heated argument, one turned to pick me up.

Now, I thought perhaps they are going to consult my wisdom. But, to my horror I felt something soft and gooey come in contact with my gilt edges, and one exclaimed, "Darn it, here comes the teach!" I realized that one of those terrible boys had used me as the parking place for his chewing gum! What a horrible fate!

What is the purpose of having a Student Council? The Student Council is an organization that encourages good school spirit and tries to promote better citizenship. Other goals of the council are development of harmonious relations between students and faculty, assistance in school management and promotion of the school's welfare.

The council undertook various projects throughout the school year. It purchased a record player and records for the school and various clubs and organizations used this equipment. We also bought uniforms for the varsity cheerleaders. The concession booth is an annual project run by the council and here the students can buy school supplies, clothing with H. A.'s emblem, and candy.

During October, the annual Student Council Convention was held at Brewer. The following people attended the convention: James Dyer, Bruce Ballard, Arnold Bubar, Larry Emery, Esther Littlefield, Edwina Laughton, Connie Bishop, James Beer, and Ronald Tweedie. We were proud to have Edwina represent Hartland Academy by running for the secretarial office.

At the convention the Honorable Clinton Clauson, late Governor of Maine, and Mr. Charles K. McWhorter, Legislative Assistant to Vice President Richard Nixon, were the guest speakers. Their speeches were based on promoting democracy and on what democracy offers to the people. After the election of officers, the students attended workshops in which problems faced by Student Councils throughout the state were discussed.

The Student Council members wish to express their thanks to Mr. Hamlin, the faculty advisor, whose assistance and guidance are greatly appreciated.

The Student Council held its first meeting in September.

The following members were elected as officers:

Esther Littlefield	President
Edwina Laughton	Vice-president
Connie Bishop	Secretary

HONOR AWARDS

The following students earned State Honors or High Honors in the Academic Recognition Program of the Maine Teachers Association:

High Honors—Mathematics—James Dyer, Bruce Ballard

High Honors—Composite Test Score—James Dyer, Bruce Ballard, Larry Emery

Honors—English—James Dyer, Rowena Whitten

Honors—Mathematics—Arnold Bubar

This year the students at the academy were pleased to have a guest from a foreign country. Elsbeth Noller from Roemerstrasse, Germany, spent six months with us majoring in commercial subjects.

Elsbeth took her studies very seriously and soon was doing remarkably well in them despite her language handicap. Indeed, her English theme was one of the few chosen to be read at the Christmas Assembly.

With her winning smile and warm manner, Elsbeth made good friends of the students and teachers. We were all sorry when it came time to say, "Auf Wiedersehn," at her goodbye party held at the fire hall.

The small boy at the school music recital pointed to Ethel on the stage and asked his mother, "Why is that man in the orchestra shaking his stick at her?"
"Shush!" the mother whispered. "He's not shaking his stick at her."

The teacher was trying to make the pupils think, so she asked some tricky questions. "Dicky," said the teacher, "give me an example of nothing."

Dicky did not hesitate. "Nothing," he said, "is a balloon with its skin off."

Eric was depositing dimes in a soft drink machine. As each bottle was delivered, he would grab it and eagerly deposit another dime. After a dozen bottles had been delivered, an onlooker said to him, "Don't you think you've got about enough?"

"What?" was the answer, "you want me to stop right in the middle of a winning streak?"
