To The Underclassmen:

Another year has been completed. To the seniors, these are the last of our high school days. To you, the underclassmen, graduation is something still to be attained.

As President of the Senior Class, I'd like to offer some advice. Life is merely a short evolution in the great span of time. Now is your opportunity to begin to build the foundation for a successful life. You must make the foundation unshakably firm in order to resist the destructive forces of life.

Are you searching for material things? I don't think so. Success cannot be measured by them. Material things can be shattered and destroyed by one relatively small force, natural or man-made. Attain something that cannot be destroyed, something that is a part of you, something you can utilize to its fullest extent. Yes, strive to gain that valuable knowledge which will serve as your foundation—your unshakable basis.

Continue going to school for as long as you deem necessary. Enjoy every great minute of it. We did. But during these enjoyable days do not lose sight of the fact that to learn is to live.

LITERATURE

NIGHT

The darkness engulfs me,
What does the night hold?
The blackness seems heavy,
The feeling is cold.

Suddenly I fear
The depth of the night.
All is so bleared
To the Devil's delight.

It's full of my sin,
Of my love, of my hate.
It's what I have been—
My life it relates.

Is it too late I ask,
To change what I've been?
Then I remain motionless,
A tear on my face.

Now I feel love,
Filling hate's place.
Is this death I feel
In this darkening plight?

Or new life revealed
In the depth of the night.

LIFE

Life can be good
If we really want it to be,
But we have to work hard,
You and me.

We must look forward
And not behind;
Work hard to learn
And cultivate our minds.

We must promote the good
And destroy the bad
To restore the America
We once had.

An America where
All people are free
From prejudice and hate,
A true Democratic society.

We must be fair
And give all a chance
To share a good life
In a land equality enhanced.

I pray we will build
A society of free
Americans, who will remember
To think good of you and me.

LIFE IS A STRANGE THING

Life is a strange thing. It holds joy for some people, sorrow for others. To some people, just waking up in the morning, going to work, and getting to bed at night is life. But life is more; it can be a meaningful experience.

The early years of life are the growing years—the learning years. From birth to grade school, through high school, we learn, adapt our knowledge, lose friends, make friends, and search for our purpose in life. During these first years we set goals, run in competition, win some, lose some, and strive for maturity.

The meaning of life to different people is different because to find the true meaning of life is to find the true meaning of your purpose. If you know why you're here, have set goals for yourself, and can happily work toward your goals, then I feel you have found life. Life is not something you run away from but a blessing to hang on to—for you can have but one on earth.

A TRAPPER'S PRAYER

O Lord, just give me eyes to see
The grandest of this country,
With valleys green and mountains high
Which seem to stretch and reach the sky
And shelter animals with silky fur.
O Lord, that's what I'm living for.
I tramp the earth from early dawn
And trap the fur you placed hereon.
O Lord, while on this earth I dwell
Just give me fur to trap and sell,
And when at last I get my call
No ear will hear a murmur fall.
And chisel deep on my tombstone tall,
"The Lord, He giveth and taketh all."

David Whitten '68

SUNDAY NIGHT BLUES

Sorrow attacks the mind.
It supercedes pain,
And stays around
After the mourning.
It burrows itself in the soul,
And when the last traces
Of joy and laughter
Have been stifled,
It becomes the person.

TIRED OF IT ALL

I'm tired of reality. I'm tired of learning from books, from professors, and from the wise. I'm tired of it all.

If only I could imagine I were somewhere else; somewhere where there isn't any responsibility; some far off land where I can spend sweet moments alone, without a care or worry.

Somewhere the sun is bright and the sand which it warms is soft. I can bury my body there and sleep contentedly. Somewhere I can rise again and swim in the sea with no one to disturb me.

That somewhere would have everything! Everything! That life would be . . . horrible.

My land would have the beauty of the summer to the south, the brightness of fall to the west, the newness of spring to the east, and the quietness of winter to the north. Mine would be a heaven.

There would be no people to bother me. I see nothing but trees, grass, sky, and water. Animals, the shy and timid kind, would be the only life around me. That life would be . . . horrible. There would be no one to talk intelligently to. I wouldn't be able to express my feelings for life if I had no one to talk to.

There would be some one to touch, smell, hear, and see; some one who could talk to me and tell me what he feels; some one that could be my friend. That life would be . . . horrible. I would become bored with one person. I wouldn't see any new faces . . . I would be almost alone again. I would have no problems or worries, but life has lost its beauty when it has lost its adventure. I long for problems, for books, for people, and for life. I want reality. Heaven is never heaven; heaven is earth.

HE'S COMING, VIET NAM

It's eleven twenty-five and all is still.
Just the wind and I on a forsaken hill.
The moon is hiding, the stars are gone,
But for me this night can't last too long.
For tomorrow I sail far across the sea;
The army's found a place for me
In a strange and war-bound land,
With death and destruction on either hand.

I'm coming, Viet Nam.

At dawn I must rise and make my adieus
To Mom and Dad and, of course, Betty Lou.
Mom will be hardest. I know she'll cry.
Dad'll grip my hand and whisper good-bye.
Betty Lou will say don't be gone from my side
Too long; and I'll still be your bride
When you return from that war-bound land,
With death and destruction on either hand.

He's coming, Viet Nam.

Well, that young man sailed the next day at dawn.
Just moments with his family and he was gone.
Gone from his homeland, gone from the earth,
Never to return to the place of his birth.
He fought for his country, for his country he died,
He never saw his son, nor again saw his bride.
He didn't return from that war-bound land,
He found death and destruction on either hand.

You have him, Viet Nam.

LOVE

Love is not like hate or jealousy although it is a definite state of mind. Love tends to give us warmth and security. There are many different types of love, but all pertain to one state—that of mind. Love is a passion for something that one desires. Love can be compared to a type of freedom. If one has love he has freedom from hate. He is able to encompass all that is around him with a warm touch of being. Love is never cold or harsh, it could never be defined as a cruel or heart-breaking affair for love is compassion that is only expressed through the most intimate means. Love can not be measured as a thing of large or small portions. Actually it is not even visible. Love is there in the way a person moves, talks, or gestures—in everything he does. It can not be bought, but can be won by means of determination. Without love a person is missing one of the greatest things in life. If one has a great love for something he needs nothing more to subdue his mind. Love is achieved as a result of great effort in everyone's life and should be cherished not perished from one's world.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

First row, l. to r.: G. Smith, D. Tucker, D. Moore, R. Reynolds.
 Second row: E. Taylor, J. Ripton.
 Third row: G. Small, K. Stedman, D. Fernald.

The highest honor one can achieve at Hartland Academy is election to the National Honor Society. Candidates are judged on scholarship, leadership, service and character. The impressive initiation ceremony was held at Hampden Academy for the newly-elected members of our chapter.

Officers elected were: Dixie Moore, president; Deborah Tucker, vice president; and Geneva Small, secretary-treasurer. John Ripton served as general chairman for the annual scholarship drive conducted to raise money for scholarships for members of the graduating class.

Standing, L. to R.: Mr. Harnois, P. Ripton, G. Smith, G. Butler, B. Merrow, J. Ripton, E. Taylor, F. Harding.

This year the Library Club revised the library rules and charter. They have also reclassified the entire library under the Dewey Decimal System. The library now contains approximately 1600 books covering various subjects.

A Volleyball game between the All-stars and the teachers was held in order to make money for new dictionaries. There was also a book fair held at the Academy, May 1, 2, and 3, to provide students with inexpensive literature, as well as to make money for the library use.

The Library Club would like to thank Mr. Harnois for the time and effort he spent working in the library.
