DEDICATION

We, the members of the Senior class, respectfully and with sincere gratitude, dedicate this issue of the "Ripple" to Mr. Berry. He not only has been a wonderful teacher, advisor, and friend, but he also has contributed his services unselfishly to our sports and other various activities during his three years at H. A.

EDITORIAL

"Superior Students Exclusively For Science"

Panic was and still is widely spread in America because of the successful launching of the Russian satellite, "Sputnik." Why should this greatly upset the United States? One of the most outstanding reasons is that the United States realizes that we, as compared with Russia, are very lax in promoting promptitude and precision. They also realize that continued obvious laxity could drive us onto a permanent war basis which in turn could bring on a dictatorial government of one kind or another.

In order to prevent this, leaders and men of authority have drawn the tentative conclusion that superior students should be set aside for scientific research. Today, more than ever before, there are many perplexing questions in the minds of leaders concerning the country's future security in relation to scientific research. Because the power and security of the country remain in the apt hands of these men, the important questions must be answered with much contemplation and accuracy.

Three classes of people think differently on this subject. Many common people under a democracy rebel against the mere suggestion of changing their ways to fit this modern era of science. Being entirely opposite, some leaders consider it an excellent idea for the safety of our country today and in the future. Then again, educators examine the solution in a different light. They consider the need for able, intellectual students in other fields as well as in science.

The common people in the United States think as individuals rather than as a unit. The mere suggestion of any dictatorial ways or means seems harsh and unfair to them, and rightly it should. On the other hand, leaders and politicians have many reasons to back up their statement that superior men should devote themselves to the needs of their country, especially in scientific research.

The first and foremost reason is the nation's security at this time. The second reason is that they want to see a nation built up that will rule itself. Some leaders of America believe that the only answer is educating the superior students exclusively for scientific work.

Educators and those interested in education are of the opinion that able or gifted students should be placed in education as well as in science. They recognize that none of this or any other school generation will live in a lonely isolation with computing machines or atomic reactors, but in a world of people. How are tomorrow's people going to be suited to this world if all superior students of today are educated in science exclusively?

After examining the viewpoints of the leaders, the educators, and the common people, I can see that each opinion has some significance and value. I am inclined to agree with the educators in that I believe that in order for the future generations to exist there must be gifted educators who will educate the people in the score of diversified fields.

SPUTNIK WOKE US UP

The startling news that the Russians had put a man-made satellite into orbit around the Earth did more than anything else to make us realize that our educational system today is below par compared to other countries. We Americans have been contented to rest on our past achievements and think that our educational system was adequate. But it is far from adequate in this age of science. There are several steps that could be taken that should immediately begin to strengthen our present system of education. Sure, it will cost us a lot of money. But what is money when our freedom, our very existence on this Earth, is being threatened by the Russian supremacy in science?

The first step in the rebuilding of our educational system is the construction of more modern school buildings. Many of our schools today are not adequate for the number of those who attend. Also of importance is the acquiring of up-to-date textbooks, properly equipped chemistry and physics labs, up-to-date maps for social studies, etc.

The second step in this program would be the acquiring of capable and qualified teachers. Although many are entering the teaching profession today, there is still a definite shortage of qualified teachers. What is the main reason why there are not enough qualified teachers today? This seems to bring us back to the same old problem of money. In most sections of the country today, teachers are considered to be underpaid for the amount of work they have to do. There is an old saying, "You get what you pay for," so let's pay bigger salaries and get better qualified teachers.

The third step of improvement in many schools is in the curriculum itself. There are too many easy subjects and not enough math and science courses. I believe that everyone who wants to go to school should go, but there is no room in our schools for those who are not there with the genuine desire to get an education. The way to eliminate this element would be to toughen up the curriculum with math and science courses and dispose of the easier subjects. This would also help those students who need more math and science.

If our freedom, our very existence, is to be maintained, we must take steps such as these to overhaul our educational system. Only after these steps have been accomplished can we regain our supremacy in the field of science.

THEY CALLED ME A JUVENILE DELINQUENT

In two hours I, Ann Mitchell, will go to court. I am another juvenile delinquent case. I just read the article about myself on the front page of today's newspaper. The newspaper men were out to find a good story, and I guess they found it. They don't know the whole story though. Let me tell you how I got here.

It goes back to June, 1942, when I was born. I was the fifth child in a family of ten. My father was an alcoholic and never could keep a job to support us. I can't remember of ever having a well-balanced meal. The clothes on our backs were from charity drives, and the shack we lived in wasn't a fit place to call "home." We lived on the other side of the tracks; therefore, the houses and families around us were in almost as bad condition. I went to school until I was fourteen. At that time my mother thought it best that I stay home and take care of the younger children, since the four oldest had all left home. My mother found a job while I took care of my five younger brothers and sisters. We saw our father about once a week, but never saw him sober.

Life started looking up for a change, after my mother went to work. The next few weeks we ate better, looked better, and slept better. It didn't last long though. The night of March 21, 1957, changed my whole life. I was awaiting the time my mother would come home from work, which usually was six o'clock. Six o'clock came and passed. About eleven o'clock I was very worried. A half hour later my father walked in the door, sober and serious for a change. He didn't say anything for a moment. Then he looked at me and said, "Ann, your mother won't be home tonight or any other night. She was hit by an automobile this evening—killed instantly." He turned then and walked out. I never saw my father again. I was so mixed up after that, that I didn't know what to do. That's when it all started. My brothers and sisters and I had to eat and be clothed. They were too young to take care of themselves, and I couldn't leave them and get a job. There seemed only one thing to do. At first it was only petty theft. I didn't want to do it, but I had to. Everything worked out all right until winter. We shivered at night and had little to eat. One of my sisters got pneumonia, and I thought surely she would die. One night I crossed the tracks and went into the city. Before I knew it, I had smashed the glass of a drugstore and was trying frantically to find medicine to give Kelly. It was then that they caught me.

I told the police where my sisters and brothers were. They took them out of the shack and put them into an orphanage. Kelly, who was ill, was taken to the hospital. Already, the twins have been adopted and others have been considered. I am happy now. They will have a mother and father, a home, clothing, three meals a day, and a chance to go to school and church. During those long months after I lost my parents, I prayed that God would find a way out of this for me. My prayers were answered that night I was caught.

I don't know what my official punishment will be, but my worst punishment will last until people forget my name and picture under the heading, "Juvenile Delinquent Caught Stealing Drugs."

WHAT PRICE FREEDOM

If we in America were to take a good look at the conditions behind the so called "Iron Curtain," perhaps we would take our freedom more seriously. It is a common failing with us as Americans to consider our innumerable freedoms as rights, rather than privileges.

Yet this wasn't always so. During the Revolutionary War men fought and died so that the colonists might be free. In the last half of the nineteenth century, our young nation was split wide open with internal strife, because we took seriously the words, "All men are created equal." During the World Wars many died so that we might remain free. As you can see, the price of freedom has been high.

We are still paying dearly for freedom through our armed forces, foreign aid, and advanced science. Some people believe that Russia will one day conquer us and strip us of our freedom, but I feel that as long as there are people who will lay down their lives, fortunes, and security for freedom, the hammer and sickle will never reap a harvest on this continent.

"INTERNATIONAL FARM YOUTH EXCHANGE"

Each year a group of foreign students are sent to America to live on farms and to learn all they can about our American way of life. In exchange, a group of American girls and boys are sent to foreign countries for the same reason.

This program is sponsored by the National 4-H Foundation and is really very important. It is designed to promote world peace through understanding.

As we answer their questions about our farms and our way of living, we know they will take our words back to the rural people of their lands. In a small, but very important way, we are helping foreign people learn what we Americans are really like—not millionaires, not cowboys, not gangsters—just hard working families, struggling to raise our children to become good citizens.

One of these boys came from Nepal (an independent kingdom in the Himalayas.) He couldn't understand why the American people were always in a hurry—why they couldn't sit down and enjoy what they already had. He asked why Americans can't be happy without things.

He pointed out that we have stoves, refrigerators, and washers, but work harder than their servants do, in order to take care of our labor saving devices.

One boy said, "Why live on a hill-top with a beautiful view if you never relax to enjoy it?"

They also question our educational standards. A boy from Iran had studied all forty-eight states of America. He knew the geography, the industries, and the agriculture of each state. Here he met many who did not even know which continent Iran was on.

Our foreign visitors see our life in a different way. They ask why American husbands allow their wives to go about as they please, why women wear slacks, and why beautiful American girls are businesslike instead of being feminine? Another foreign youth told of marriage customs in their country. They don't understand the divorce problems such as we have.

These young people are eager to improve their countries, and are interested in all they see and hear in America. We try to answer their questions while they are a part of our families, but we often wonder, who learns the most, the host or the guests?

MAINE

Oh, native state of rocks and pine
How proud I am to call you mine.
From fertile soil to sea and foam
No other place I'd choose for home.

Oh, native state so proud and fair
With other states I can compare,
And though I may afar off roam
Still, to me, Maine will be home.

"WHAT'S HAPPENING TO OUR DEFENSE PROGRAM?"

Our Armed Services have worked together many years for the good of our country. The need to fight for a common cause in two great wars has brought us together. It was through working together and not trying to out-do each other that we won these wars.

We have for a number of years had peace with our neighbors. We have grown lazy! When World War II ended we slowed down in the production of military products. Russia kept up her production of military products and research in this field, giving her a strong lead on us in defense. We have fallen behind. We must get together and regain the smoothly operating efficient defense program we had in the years of war. The services must unite to help each other progress.

We are catching up in the age of outer space. By proper education and research we will gain in strength what we have lost. Actually, we have lost nothing which can't be gained back.

We live in a great country, and I am sure we will not falter now. These problems in our defense program can be worked out. It is through our failures that we learn. The United States of America will prosper and remain strong in the face of her enemies.

"A SUDDEN SURPRISE"

"Mother! Mother! Look, I can skate," I cried excitedly.

One thing I always wanted to do was to rollerskate like most of my friends. Suddenly I found myself skating backwards on one foot, and going around and around in circles. All my friends were watching me as they slowly, one by one, left the floor. I was so excited, all I could say was, "I can skate! I can skate!"

My friends began to talk to each other and smile. I knew they were talking about me. I could see my mother's face watching, along with the rest of my friends, with an amazed look on her face. I just couldn't seem to stop skating, I went on and on, feeling as if I were floating through the air. All of a sudden I found myself going faster and faster, hearing my friends cheering and shouting, and seeing bulbs flashing as they took pictures of me. I just kept going on and on not caring what happened.

And then, out of the crowd came a tall, dark, handsome young man, dressed in sparkling clothes. He came up to me and began to skate with me. We skated and skated, not stopping for anything. We did many different acts, making not one mistake. My friends were still cheering, even louder now. I thought to myself, "I'll never stop skating." Unexpectedly, the handsome young man tenderly kissed me.

Then I heard a voice say, "All right, young lady, did you have a nice dream? It's all over now and you can go home tomorrow."

I was sorely disappointed to find that I was in the hospital and had taken gas to have my tonsils removed. Everything was just a great big dream!
